A Brief History of Mosaics

Mosaic is an art form that is at least 4000 years old, the earliest known examples of mosaics made of different materials were found at a temple building in Western Asia and are dated to the second half of 3rd millennium BC. They consist of pieces of coloured stones, shells and ivory.

Traditional mosaics are made of cut small cubes of roughly square pieces of stone or handmade glass enamel of different colours, known as tesserae. Some of the earliest mosaics were made of natural pebbles, originally used to reinforce floors.

Mosaic developed even further with the Greeks, who took the stones and pebbles and turned them into even more intricate designs, but mosaics really reached their ancient glory with the Romans, in Africa and Syria, the wealthiest Roman provinces. Beautiful floors have been found in Herculaneum and Pompeii.

The mosaics in the Roman Empire featured domestic scenes, geometric designs and depictions of the gods in their pantheon.

Our mosaic tiles are a modern example of a classic style.

Modern Mosaic tiles have the power to transform a plain surface into an artistic masterpiece popping with boldness and style. ... Glass mosaic tiles have several advantages; they have high visual appeal: Glass mosaic tiles tend to have a shiny luminous style that creates a bright and spacious look in a room

Suitable for bathroom and kitchen walls and ideal for making splashbacks, borders and feature walls, swimming pools and so much more.

Glass Large Subway Tile

The name Subway Tiles comes from the tiles used in underground train stations. This smaller version is popular in kitchens and/or bathrooms, either as full walls, or as borders and strips, or mixed with other tiles.

A top-down view of a swimming pool. The pool's surface is covered in a mosaic of small, square tiles in various shades of blue and white. The water is clear and reflects the light. In the foreground, several long, green palm fronds are visible, partially obscuring the pool's edge. The pool's edge is a light-colored concrete or stone. The overall scene is bright and sunny.
